“ To: My Best Sister-Friend, Miona, and bonus sisters Stephanie, Kelly and Mama Hightower

There are no perfect words during the loss of a beloved father like yours, but I hope these words from my heart bring you some comfort.

You know that feeling when you see someone after a long time, and they embrace you with a smile, kind words, and genuine acceptance? That's how your dad made me feel—like I belonged. Since I was little, I remember countless moments when your dad, just being himself, taking care of others. His selfless acts, which he might have thought were small, were bigger than he could imagine. Whether it was driving me to school with Miona on a snowy day when the buses were late, or how he had a gentle way of communicating with my granny when she would walk over to the house to pick me up—even though she didn't speak English and he didn't speak Russian, they understood each other. And of course, all the videos Miona and I “The PQz” made that somehow ended up on his camcorder, giving him years of laughter. As we grew up and I saw him at family events, it was clear that he radiated love for his family. I was lucky enough to experience that love, and my parents and I are deeply thankful for him for being an extended family to us in the United States.

You all have mentioned countless times how your dad loved taking photos, and I believe it's because he loved life so much. To capture moments is to honor life, and you three were his pride and joy—it's all over his face in those special moments that were caught on camera. He was the ultimate #GirlDad before it became popular to say so.

Thank you, my sisters, for sharing your incredible, warrior dad with the world. The angels must have rejoiced when they heard Mr. Papa Hightower was coming to get his wings (and I can't blame them).

*We love you all,
Irina Olgart
Sending love and prayers from Timothy, Marina, and Gennady.*
