“ Sivad came to the Cesar Chavez Community Garden in SW Detroit and immediately began to help moving cinder blocks with me away to keep the walkways safer. He came with his younger daughter who shared a story of a conflict at school with another girl. We spoke about giving your power to others by attaching ourselves to their words. Sivad was very pleased with his daughter's ability to reevaluate and accept responsibility for understanding more deeply. When they were leaving they both asked for hugs (Covid) and we did. He and his family are deeply Sacred souls. May we all walk with the legacy of Sivad's virtues.

“ I became friends with Sivad through the MOTH Storytellers program. He was already nationally recognized when I told my very first story. We all know he was a great storyteller, but he was also a great listener -- so encouraging, affirming, and supportive. He invited me out to socialize after that first event, and those after-parties became something I looked forward to every month: It felt so good to be enveloped in the aura of warmth and kindness and fellowship that he exuded. My thoughts and prayers go out to his family. I miss you, Sivad.

Savid Johnson was a wonderful person, great father, brother and son. He was a very smart young man and had great wisdom for his age. I have know Savid for many years from church. I am praying for his family and I know God has welcome him with open arms. He left this earth during the greatest gesture, giving his life to save others. I will miss him.
